Drones are flying robots. In the future, they may be used in farming. They will be able to move GPS-guided tractors and manage automated milking. Drones are being used to survey crops. They will also help farmers manage the water and chemicals used in vast fields.

Chris Anderson, a famous science-fiction writer, recently switched careers to move into the field of drone manufacturing. He co-founded 3D Robotics, which is currently building drones in Mexico and the United States. These beady-eyed drones may one day keep watch over the food being grown for our consumption.

I was driving along the North-South highway from Ipoh to Kuala Lumpur when my car had a flat tyre. I was really worried because at my age – I am 70 – it is difficult to use the jack and unscrew the bolts that secured the tyre. Nevertheless, I got started on the job. It was growing dark and it had started to drizzle. My prayers were answered when an emergency help truck arrived.

“Uncle, let us help you,” said the two young men. The spare tyre was quickly fitted. I offered the two men some money but they declined to accept it.

“It’s our duty,” they said and were on their way.

As a foreigner visiting Malaysia, I wish to applaud the warm hospitality I have been showered with everywhere I have been in this lovely country.

The Bugis Seafarers

by Sofia Nasution

This documentary film tells of the history and seafaring exploits of the Bugis people whose origins lie in the Moluccas islands of Indonesia. They are renowned for their ship-building skills as well as their navigation of the seas in Southeast Asia. In ancient times, the Bugis were great fishermen and notorious pirates. Today the Bugis are a thriving business community not only in the Moluccas but also in Malaysia, the Philippines and beyond.

5 The word notorious in the text tells us that the Bugis pirates

- A were popular
- B were everywhere

- C had a bad reputation
- D had an easy time preying on seafarers

The main threats to chimpanzees are habitat destruction, hunting and disease. The increasing human population is encroaching ever deeper into even protected areas of chimpanzee habitats, and large scale logging is now a major threat to the chimpanzees of Africa. Uncontrolled hunting of chimpanzees as a source of meat is another threat. Increased contact with humans, both local people and eco-tourists, has also brought on the threat of diseases which may be mild in humans but lethal to chimpanzees.

- 6 The word logging in the above text refers to
- A poaching of animals
 - B cultivation of crops
 - C cutting down trees for timber
 - D hunting of animals for their meat

Sales Report

Sales of the new hybrid car named Super Zephyr have had mixed fortunes in the period 2000–2004. In the first year (2000), we sold 40 units. Our peak year was 2001, when we made record sales of 200 units. In the following year, our sales plunged to an all-time low of 30 units. Our sales recovered somewhat in 2003 when we managed to sell 150 units. In 2004, our performance remained unchanged as for 2003.

- 7 Select the graph that best represents the information about the sales of the Super Zephyr.

Jerantut: – 102 tourists were trapped at the Mutiara Taman Negara Resort in Kuala Tahan when floods affected the surrounding areas. Apart from Malaysians, the tourists were from Germany, France, Canada and the Czech Republic. The immediate problem they faced was a lack of food supply. However, prompt action by the Fire and Rescue Department saved the day. Four boatloads of food supplies have been ferried to the tourists. Jerantut District Officer Ali Syahbana Sabaruddin said the tourists were safe and would be transported by boat to relief centres in Kuala Tahan before being flown by helicopter to Jerantut. The tourists were stranded after the water level at Sungai Tembeling rose to 76.56 metres on Tuesday – way past the danger level of 68 metres.

Questions 16 – 25

Read the following magazine article and complete the graphic organiser on the following page.

Facebook – a foe or friend?

Do you Facebook all the time?
Is it safe? Does it intrude into the private life of others?
These are questions we would like to ask you.

Facebook has become a way of life. You can instantly communicate with old school friends or view your neighbour's vacation photos. Facebook is the king of social networking sites for a reason. We feel safe while navigating this site. You can't go wrong with its great mobile application and staying connected to your friends whenever you feel like it. Facebook is the go-to-service for keeping in touch with friends and families, reuniting with old friends and making new connections.

Of the 20 000 respondents surveyed from five countries in South East Asia, 95% of those responded with a YES to having an active Facebook account. As expected, the highest number of those caught up with Facebook fever were teenagers and young adults aged between 17 and 25.

It's safe. Think before you post. It takes only a second or two. Ask yourself if you really want to say it.

Andy Suprano. 22
Jakarta, Indonesia

Yes. I only accept friend requests from people I know. I usually post a comment of the photos posted and I share some special moments with them.

Ng Su Ling, 19
Singapore

I find it rather offensive if people make fun of others on Facebook.

Hakimi A. 25
Kuala Lumpur

It can be a dangerous site, especially for those who are naive. Remember not to share your password with anyone.

Adeline Aquino, 20
Manila

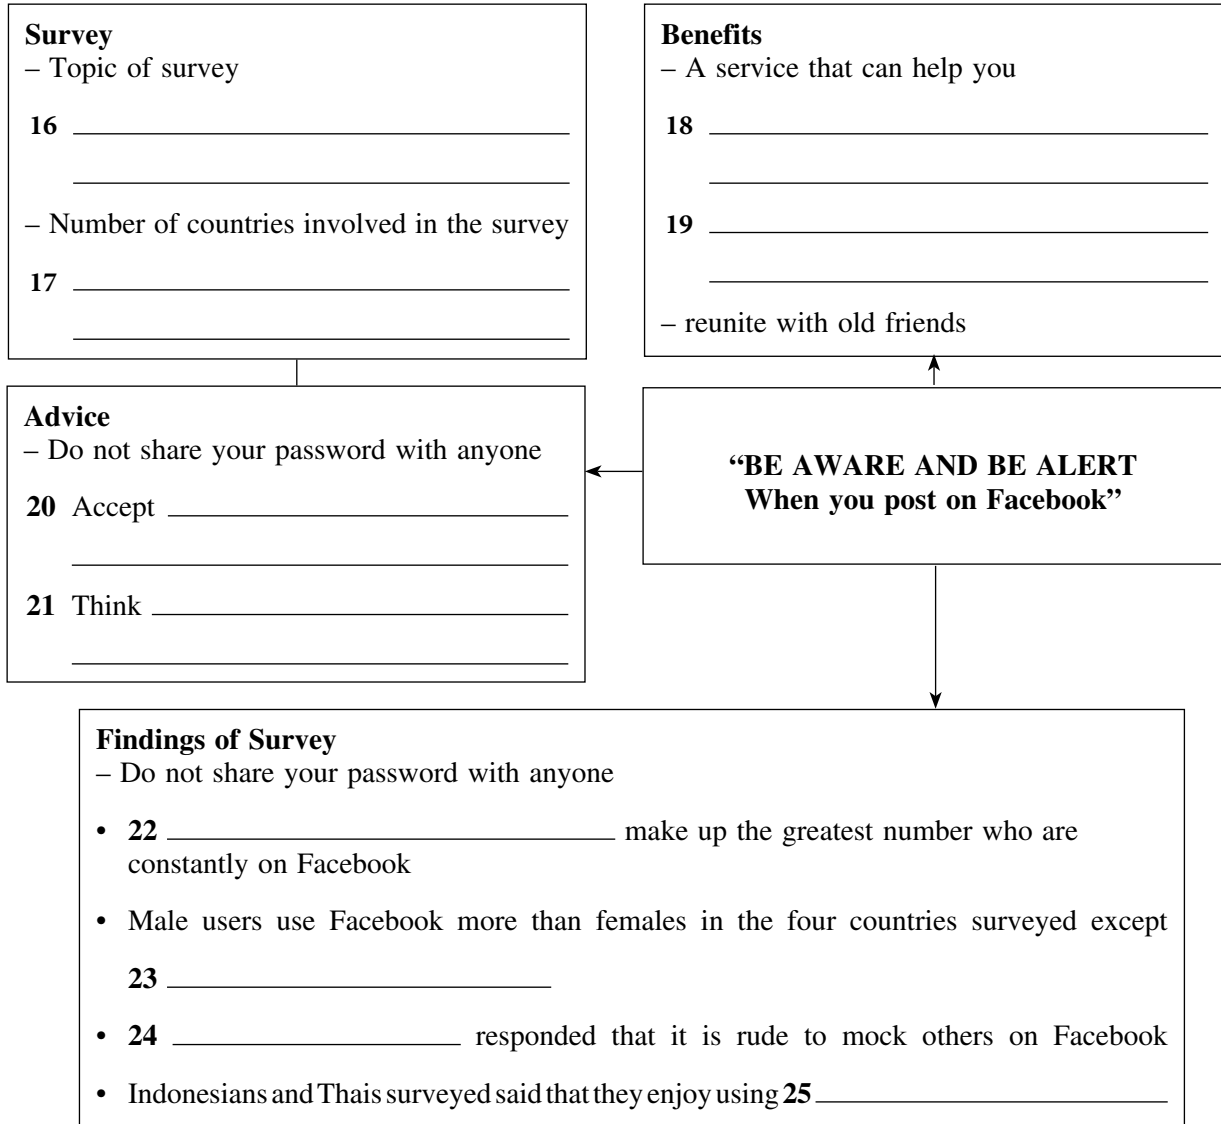

Yes, we enjoy being on Facebook and it's safe.

Indonesia	75%
Thailand	70%
Malaysia	68%

Only in the Philippines, more female users than male users are on Facebook all the time. Men outnumber women for the other four countries.

Section C

[25 marks]

[Time suggested: 50 minutes]

Questions 26 – 31 are based on the following passage.

1 After one night in Kuala Lumpur, we flew to Kuching to begin our quest which would take us to the Batang Ai National Park – the only place in Sarawak where you get to see wild orangutans. While you can pay RM1000 to go there on an organised tour, we wanted to travel on our own. Being seasoned independent travellers, we felt that we would have more time to enjoy our trip.

- 2 The first leg of our journey was a three-hour bus trip from Kuching to the small town of Sri Aman. We were the only tourists there. As we walked the streets looking for some place to put up for the night, the locals waved and shouted greetings, some covertly taking pictures of us as we passed. However, when we asked them about Batang Ai, they seemed not to know much. 10
- 3 “No one goes there nowadays,” said our taxi driver, Mahat. “There is no bus service to the place. The only helicopters that fly out belong to the police.”
- 4 We were dejected. We seemed to have reached a dead end. I sat on a roadside pavement writing my diary entry about our unlucky day. Derrick walked ahead to the riverine fishing village intending to take some photographs of the fishermen and their boats. Twenty minutes later, Derrick returned with a piece of good news. “We’re in luck,” announced Derrick. “I’ve found a boatman. He’s agreed to take us upriver by boat.” 15
- 5 The next morning, with Billy our Iban boatman at the prow, we began our trip upriver. The boat meandered with the river past lush green jungles, with occasional longhouses on the river bank. After a two-hour trip, Billy guided the boat to a wharf. He pointed to the posh, pricey Batang Ai Resort Hotel. 20
- 6 “No, Billy,” said Derrick, gesticulating wildly with his hands and head. “We want to stay in a longhouse.” Billy was at a loss. He was himself a stranger to Batang Ai. He did not know the local folk. Again Derrick found the answer. He managed to talk to some waiters at the resort. One of them, named Antalai, agreed to take us to the longhouse belonging to his family. 25
- 7 We paused hesitantly at the threshold of the longhouse feeling like total intruders. Led by Antalai and Billy, we walked ahead into the open communal living space which runs the entire length of the longhouse; on the left side doors led off to separate sleeping quarters. Skinny dogs lay all around; a group of women with toddlers and babies sat on straw mats on the floor, laughing and talking while old women dressed in long sarongs and men in shorts sat alone or in pairs. 30
- 8 That evening, the longhouse headman and his wife served us a dinner of simple traditional Iban food; fish with pickled cucumber, rice, pumpkin and sausage washed down with a glass of surprisingly strong rice-wine, which the Chief’s wife makes by hand. After a freezing shower, we settled down with the other residents in front of the communal television supplied by the government as part of a programme to ensure rural communities received news from other parts of the country. As coffee was passed around and we tuned in to a Malaysian soap series, I marvelled at how totally different but how strangely similar it all was to life back in England. 35
- 9 We awoke to the smell of wood fire and the deafening crows of roosters early the next morning. Antalai was all business today and we bid farewell to the Chief, boarding the boat again for the two-hour journey to the National Park. To begin with, the boat cut smoothly through the water, then abruptly we rounded a corner and came to a stop; the entire stretch of the river was covered in floating logs and driftwood. We made our way painstakingly through; Antalai and Billy used oars and feet to create a path as we lurched from side-to-side. Derrick and I gripped the edges of the boat as if our lives depended on it. At last, with the engine gunning, we were through and facing the next stretch of river, which was even more difficult to negotiate. We were battered by water as we fought against rapids, the bottom of the boat often scraping the riverbed or knocking into rocks – now we understood why we needed two guides to make the journey. 40
- 10 The river eventually evened out and we pulled to a stop outside what looked like several large huts on a hill. This, we thought, must be a ranger’s office where we would be able to hire a trekking guide and arrange accommodation for the night. As we approached, however, 45
- 50

we realised that the place was utterly deserted. The buildings were long ago abandoned and had fallen into disrepair; we searched the eerie huts only to find that the jungle had begun to claim them back; birds roosted in the ceilings, damp stained the floors and insects crawled over the yellowing posters on the walls. 55

- 11 This was not what we had expected. We learned, much to our disappointment, that orang-utans could no longer be seen at Batang Ai owing to deforestation activities. The primates had now retreated deeper into the interior! 60

26 From paragraph 1, why did the writer want to visit Sarawak?

_____ [1 mark]

27 From paragraph 2,

- (a) why did the tourists like the local people in Sri Aman?

_____ [1 mark]

- (b) why were they disappointed in Sri Aman?

32 Read the poem below and answer the questions that follow.

Tha Charge of the Light Brigade

Half a league, half a league,
 Half a league onward,
 All in the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred
 "Forward, the Light Brigade!
 Charge for the guns!" he said:
 Into the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred.

"Forward, the Light Brigade!"
 Was there a man dismayed?
 Not though the soldier knew
 Some one had blundered:
 Theirs not to make reply,
 Theirs not to reason why,
 Theirs but to do and die:
 Into the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred.

Cannon to right of them,
 Cannon to left of them,
 Cannon in front of them
 Volleyed and thundered;
 Stormed at with shot and shell,
 Boldly they rode and well,
 Into the jaws of Death,
 Into the mouth of Hell
 Rode the six hundred.

Alfred, Lord Tennyson
